DMIHER(DU): Educational outreach activities

Datta Meghe Institute of Higher Education and Research (DMIHER) actively undertakes a range of educational outreach activities beyond its campus, extending its commitment to community welfare and public health. DMIHER provides community health services, including targeted health interventions in tribal areas and rural regions, through its Rural and Tribal Health Mission. Organ donation awareness campaigns and CPR demonstration and training sessions are organized for the local community, equipping individuals with life-saving skills. Initiatives like the Oral Health Mela focus on educating school children on oral hygiene, while collaborative activities with the Girl Up organization empower young girls in the community. In addition, DMIHER addresses agrarian crises through community interventions, promoting mental health and social support among affected farmers. The university's AROGYA-SETU program is designed to promote health literacy, and minority populations benefit from tailored programs through collaborative efforts. DMIHER also adopts families or villages, providing ongoing support, and organizes outreach for underprivileged and orphaned children. Through these programs, DMIHER demonstrates a strong commitment to improving the quality of life and health awareness in underserved populations.
